Introduction

This guide has been prepared especially for Baruch pre-law undergraduate students and alumni considering applying to law school and entering the legal profession. The Guide is designed to help at each stage by providing accurate and up-to-date information.

Appreciation is extended to Max Berger '68 for creating and generously supporting the Max Berger Pre-Law Program at Baruch College established in 2007, and the Northeastern Association of Pre-law Advisors for permission to use content from the NAPLA Pre-Law Guide. The NAPLA Pre-Law Guide is based on Cornell University's Legal Careers Guide, which was used by permission from Cornell Career Services. NAPLA acknowledges the following schools for their contributions to the Guide: Binghamton University, Boston College, Boston University, Bucknell University, Columbia University, Duke University, Northeastern University, Princeton University, and Texas A & M University. The Law School Admission Council provided information on study abroad transcripts, and the Financial Aid section is based on the "Financial Aid Toolkit" developed by the Pre-Law Advisors National Council (PLANC).

Exploring Your Interest in Law

A J.D., Juris Doctor, can lead to a wide range of law-related careers and can open doors to careers in government, business, higher education, communications, and numerous other fields. Law school graduates are administrators, teachers, librarians, consultants and business managers as well as advocates, judges, and politicians.

The law can be a rewarding profession. At its best, legal practice challenges the intellect, demanding the exercise of reason and judgment. The ethics of the profession require attorneys to promote justice, fairness, and morality; thus, legal employment can bring particular satisfaction to those who seek to work within the law, and seek to eradicate social injustice.

There are significant differences in career choices lawyers make, from public interest law and government law to private practice in a firm. The range in starting salaries alone can exceed $100,000 for associate positions with large law firms and $50,000 with most other legal employers, including, small firms, government, and non-profit organizations. The need to pay back law school loans can affect the career choices of a new graduate.

Before beginning the application process, consider carefully if a law degree is right for you. It is not necessary to know what kind of law you want to practice to decide to attend law school, but it can prove helpful.

There are a number of ways you can explore the field of law:

- Talk with your pre-law advisor and/or a career counselor about your interest in pursuing a legal education. At Baruch College, pre-law advisement and referrals to related resources are available through the Max Berger Pre-law Program housed in the Starr Career Development Center, NVC2-150. Appointments can be made for pre-law advisement through Starr Search or by contacting Starr at (646) 312-4693. Expect your first appointment to be 45-60 minutes in length.

You will also receive confirmation of the name of your pre-law advisor from the Law School Admission Council when you register with the Credential Assembly Services (CAS).

- Conduct research on legal careers using resources through your pre-law advising office or college career office and materials available in the library.
- Investigate online resources, including the American Bar Association, the National Association for Law Placement, Law School Transparency, and Internet Legal Research Group.
- Intern or work part-time with a law firm; law-related organization or government agency to gain exposure to the field and to experience the work environment. Baruch students can get paid for unpaid legal internships when working for a public sector legal employer through the Max Berger Pre-law Unpaid Internship Stipend Program. Helpful websites include probono.net; idealist.org and similar websites.

- Conduct informational interviews to learn about the legal profession. Speak with lawyers who are members of the faculty, alumnae/i of the college, family members or friends to learn:
 - * What lawyers do in a typical work day
 - * Personal attributes needed to be successful in a legal career
 - * Satisfactions and dissatisfactions of the field
 - * Impact of a legal career on personal lives

Realities of a Legal Career

An important step in making your decision is to distinguish between commonly held myths and expectations and the reality of legal practice. Hours can be very long and often include weekends. Legal work can require spending considerable time in tedious, painstaking research. Depending on the type of law practiced and the location, gaining employment with some law firms can be difficult and salaries may not meet expectations. The market for new lawyers is competitive for those seeking positions in large cities and firms that are in high demand.

Employment statistics for the class of 2019 law graduates reveal the following¹:

- The national median starting salary was $72,500.
- Approximately 55.2% of the class worked in private practice in law firms.
- About 32% took positions in public service, including judicial clerkships, government agencies, military and public interest organizations.
- Graduates entering business accounted for about 11.3%.
- Approximately 76.2% of graduates were employed in a full-time long-term position for which bar passage is required.

While a corporate lawyer in a private firm may earn as much as $180,000 the first year, he/she may also work twelve hours a day, six or seven days a week. Most of those interested in public interest law can expect a starting salary of around $50,500.

¹NALP The National Association for Law Placement Jobs & J.D.'s: Employment and Salaries of New Law Graduates—Class of 2019. You may research the employment statistics and salary information for the Class of 2019 by visiting NALP's website at <http://www.nalp.org>.

*Note that while employment rates increased for the Class of 2019, the strength of the outcomes is due to a smaller incoming law school class. Indeed, the size of the 2019 graduating class was 27% smaller than the historically large Class of 2013. In simpler terms, the rise in the employment rate can be explained by the fact that the size of the graduating class has fallen faster than the number of jobs secured.

Preparing for Law School

Admissions committees look at a variety of factors and trends in your academic record in an attempt to predict how you will perform in law school. At Baruch, there is no “pre-law major” and unlike medical school, there are no specific educational requirements for entrance into law school. Baruch College offers 2 related minors: Business Law through the Zicklin School of Business and Law & Policy through the Weissman School of Arts & Sciences.

Develop research, analysis, and writing skills

Law schools are interested in your ability to do rigorous analytical research, to write well, to present, and to persuade. Take courses that will develop these skills. The American Bar Association offers an overview of the skills and values important to preparing for a legal education and a career in law, specifically, the Core Skills, Values, Knowledge, and Experiences listed below:

- Problem Solving
- Critical Reading
- Writing and Editing
- Oral Communication and Listening
- Research
- Organization and Management
- Public Service and Promotion of Justice
- Relationship-Building and Collaboration
- Background Knowledge
- Exposure to the Law

Law-related classes may allow you to get a feel for law as a general subject, but they neither cover the material in the same depth nor embody the intensity and rigor of law school. Therefore, they are not especially accurate indicators of your ability to succeed in the study of law, or whether you will enjoy it.

Select a Major

Choose a major that interests you. Admissions offices are not particularly interested in your major, but they are interested in how well you did in the discipline(s) you chose to pursue. This is also true for minors.

While specific coursework may be helpful in corporate law, environmental law or intellectual property, a JD is a generalist’s degree, and applicants come from widely diverse academic backgrounds.

Compile an impressive record

A solid GPA, particularly within your major, is expected, and a willingness to go beyond requirements demonstrates an intellectual curiosity that would be advantageous in the study of law. Academic excellence reflects discipline and abilities, though the variety and depth of your coursework, will also be seriously considered by admissions committees as evidence of your interests and motivation.

In general, lecture courses provide a good foundation for further instruction, while seminars allow you to present, discuss, critique, and defend more specific ideas. Smaller classes give you the opportunity to interact with faculty. Develop relationships with faculty whom you might later ask for letters of recommendation; make yourself stand out as an individual by attending office hours, asking questions in class, and conducting research with faculty.

Pursue Activities

Law schools will be interested in your extracurricular activities, leadership experience, summer jobs, internships, and public service since they seek well-rounded candidates for admission. Select activities that interest you; they do not have to be directly related to law. Over time, get involved in more depth in fewer activities. Take initiative and show leadership.

Baruch College offers many student club activities including the Pre Law Society. Additionally, support is offered through the Max Berger Pre-Law Program through the various programs and activities including: The Pre-Law Fellowship Program, matching students with mentors; The Winter & Summer Pre-Law Institutes and the Pre-Law Internship Stipend Program, see <https://studentaffairs.baruch.cuny.edu/starr-career-development-center/leadership-programs/pre-law/programs-and-activities/> for more information.

Your Credit Record

It is important to keep your credit in good shape. This will be helpful if you take loans out to finance your law school education.

Determining Where to Apply

With over 200 accredited law schools in the United States, how do you decide where to apply and ultimately where to attend? Begin by assembling a list of law schools based on the criteria that are important to you, and then consider revising your choices according to your chances of admission.

Do not let the search for "long shots, good chances, and sure things" govern your selection process. Selecting schools carefully will help reduce the time and expense of applying to an excessive number of schools. That said, remember that applying to law schools is very competitive, especially during challenging economic times. As a result, it is important to ensure that you are applying to more than just a small number of law schools. LSAC reports that students typically apply to 6-9 law schools during the application cycle.

Criteria for Selection

Consider the following factors and determine which are important to you. Some resources are provided at the end of this section:

National/Regional Schools: Does the school attract applicants from across the country and abroad, or are most students from the region in which the school is located? Do most students want to work throughout the country or in the school's region following graduation?

Location: Is the school in an urban area or in a suburban/rural setting? Is it part of a university or is it independent? Are there other graduate schools nearby? Is the school in a place you would want to be for three years and where you would be willing to work following graduation, depending on employment opportunities?

Faculty/Classes: What are the academic and experiential backgrounds of faculty? How accessible are they? What is the faculty-student ratio, the number of full-time vs. adjunct faculty, and the number of female and minority faculty? How many students are in each course? Are classes taught in the Socratic Method or lecture?

Facilities and Resources: Is the school affiliated with a university? Do students have access to courses from a range of academic disciplines to supplement their legal curriculum? Is the library large enough to accommodate holdings and permit students to conduct research and study? How helpful is the library staff? How accessible are electronic databases such as Lexis and Westlaw? In general, do the facilities provide a comfortable learning environment?

Student Body: What is the size of the entering class? What does the admissions profile tell you about the quality of the student body? Where did students study as undergraduates and what are their geographic backgrounds? Is there diversity of interests, gender, and personal/cultural backgrounds? What is the overall atmosphere – are students friendly or overly competitive? Is there much interaction with fellow students outside the classroom?

Special Programs: What courses are available in specialized areas? What joint degree programs of interest to you are available? What are the opportunities for practical experience, including clinics, internships, etc.? Can you "write" on to law reviews (by submitting a written work) in addition to be selected based on class rank? What specialized institutes, journals, or organizations exist in your areas of interest? Does the school demonstrate a commitment to women and students of color through special programs? Does the school have a pro bono program or a community service requirement?

Career Services: What advising and resources are available to help you find a job? Is career counseling readily available? How many employers recruit at the law school and who are they? What percentage of the class has positions at graduation? In what types of positions and geographic areas are they employed? What is the percentage of graduates holding judicial clerkships? What assistance is given to students not interested in working in large corporate law firms? What is the bar passage rate for recent graduates? How involved are alumnae/i in career activities?

Student Life: Is on-campus housing available for first-year students? If not, does the school offer assistance in locating off-campus housing? Is the school located in a desirable or safe area? What is the cost of living? What types of cultural opportunities are there? Does the school provide recreational facilities? What is the general ambiance?

Costs: What are tuition, housing, and transportation costs? Is financial aid exclusively need-based, or are merit scholarships available? Does the school offer a loan forgiveness program for students who enter public interest legal careers after graduation? What is the average debt burden for graduates from this school? What is the cost of living in the area?

There are ways to minimize your cost of attending law school and to keep down the debt you incur. It is wise to apply to schools where you will be in the top part of the applicant pool; schools may give you a merit scholarship to attract you. Also, public schools are usually less expensive, and even if you are not a resident of a state in which a school is located, you can sometimes pay in-state tuition after your first year of law school.

Reputation

A number of factors contribute to a school's reputation, including faculty, facilities, career services, and the reputation of the parent university. Though a number of law school rankings are available, most factors evaluated are not quantifiable, and therefore you should not perceive the rankings as accurate or definitive.

Selectivity at law schools, however, is one factor that can be quantified; you can gauge a school's relative selectivity by comparing the number of applicants accepted to the overall number of applications. Two resources that will help you determine your competitiveness for schools are the Official Guide to ABA-Approved Law Schools and the Boston College Online Law School Locator.

Law schools can be divided roughly into three groups:

- Schools with national reputations that tend to appear in various "top ten" lists. They draw students from a national pool and offer significant geographic mobility to graduates.
- Schools with good regional reputations that are attended primarily by students from the region, who may want to remain in the area following graduation, but who may also seek positions throughout the country.
- Local schools that draw students primarily from the immediate area who want to practice there following graduation.

For a more detailed discussion of law school reputation and the process for evaluating schools, refer to the Official Guide to ABA-Approved Law Schools.

Non-Traditional Alternatives

Evening divisions and part-time programs make it possible for students to work and study law simultaneously, earning a Juris Doctor (J.D.) in four years. A few schools on the quarter system allow students to enter mid-year. Summer entry and/or summer courses can accelerate the degree program from three to two-and-a-half calendar years. And finally, some law schools have created summer trial or pipeline programs, which allow borderline applicants to prove themselves capable of legal study in time for the fall semester.

Publications and Online Resources

There are a number of resources designed to help you research and evaluate law schools. Two essential resources you will want to use include the following:

- LSAC Official Guide to ABA-Approved Law Schools provides information on the more than 200 American Bar Association-approved law schools including faculty, library resources, enrollment, bar passage, placement, 25th and 75th percentile LSAT scores and undergraduate GPAs.
- The NAPLA/SAPLA Book of Law School Lists provides information about joint degrees, areas of academic emphasis within the schools, schools that grant one-year deferrals, bar passage rates at a number of schools, schools that award non-need-based scholarships, etc.

After you complete your research and compile a list of schools, meet with your pre-law advisor to discuss schools of interest to you and to get a reality check on your competitiveness for them.

Understanding Admissions Criteria

Objective Criteria

Law schools consider the objective criteria, the GPA and LSAT score, the factors that most accurately predict how applicants will perform in their first year:

Law School Admission Test (LSAT): Applicants take the LSAT, a standardized test, during one of nine test administrations offered annually by the Law School Admission Council. Scores, which range from 120 to 180, are used by most law schools as a common measurement of potential for success in law school. Note: There are a growing number of law schools accepting the GRE instead of the LSAT.

Undergraduate Grade Point Average (GPA): Applicants submit undergraduate transcripts to the Credential Assembly Service (CAS), which converts grades to a cumulative grade point average using a set of consistent values. This cumulative grade point average includes all grades the student has received at various undergraduate institutions. The GPA offers admissions committees another numerical basis for comparing applicants.

Applicant Index: Many law schools ask the CAS to combine applicants' LSAT scores and undergraduate GPAs with weighted constants to produce a single number which can be used to assess and compare potential for doing well.

Subjective Criteria

Subjective criteria are the factors law schools consider in addition to GPAs and LSAT scores:

Personal Statement: Applicants submit a personal statement as part of the application process for almost all law schools. Admissions committees look for a concise, detailed, well-written statement revealing the applicant's individuality. They want to learn from the statement who the applicant is and what makes him/her qualified to study at their law schools.

Letters of Recommendation (LOR): Most law schools require applicants to submit letters of recommendation from professors or employers to gain a different perspective on the applicant's academic strength and personal qualities. Admissions officers find most helpful specific examples of applicants' motivation and intellectual curiosity, an assessment of communication skills, and a comparison with peers.

Experience: This factor includes undergraduate curricular and extracurricular activities, internships, part-time and full-time work experience. Include a resume in your application materials that demonstrates your skills and abilities relevant to the study of law and how you will contribute to the diversity and strength of the class.

Most law schools have recruitment programs to increase participation in the legal profession by underrepresented groups. State schools may reserve seats for state residents. Review websites of schools to learn about their selection criteria, you may want to contact schools about your specific concerns.

Applying to Law School

After reaching the decision to pursue a law degree, you will want to submit a strong and complete application to increase your chances for admission. The first step in the application process will be to meet with Baruch's pre-law advisor, who can help you create a strategy for maximizing your chances for success.

Next you should open an online account with the Law School Admission Council (LSAC). LSAC is comprised of over 200 American Bar Association-approved law schools in the U.S. and law schools in Canada and Australia, and was founded to coordinate and facilitate the process of applying to law school.

Be aware that applying to law school is not inexpensive. Basic costs include:

- The Credential Assembly Service registration fee
- LSAT registration fee
- CAS Law School Reports
- Application fees (per school)

You might need to add other costs such as LSAT preparation, travel to visit law schools, etc.

LSAC offers fee waivers for those with a demonstrated inability to pay for essential parts of the application. The waivers cover the costs of a limited number of LSATs; registration for the CAS, and a limited number of CAS Law School Reports. Additionally, LSAC has recently teamed up with the Khan Academy to offer free on-line LSAT prep for all.

Law School Admission Test (LSAT)

Currently, the Law School Admission Test (LSAT) is required for admission to all American Bar Association-approved law schools. Keep in mind that there are a number of law schools that have announced acceptance of a GRE score instead of the LSAT. Detailed test information—dates, registration forms, fees, and deadlines—and registration are available online.

Be aware that test dates can fill quickly. It is advisable, then, to register several months in advance of a test date so that you can take the test at a time when you are most ready.

The optimal time to take the exam is late September/early October of the year you apply, which will allow you to obtain your LSAT score before applying in the early fall (before November 15).

Scores from the November and sometimes even the January administration will reach law schools in time to complete application deadlines at most schools although applying this late is not recommended as your chances of getting accepted and receiving potential scholarship awards diminishes greatly this late in the application cycle.

The LSAT is designed to provide law school admissions committees with a common measure of an applicants' aptitude for legal study. The test consists of three multiple choice sections, each thirty-five minutes in length:

- 1) one reading comprehension section
- 2) one analytical reasoning section
- 3) one logical reasoning sections

A 35-minute writing sample taken at a later time after the test date is not scored; copies of the writing sample are sent to schools where you apply.

Your score is computed on a scale of 120 to 180, based on the number of questions you answer correctly; there is no deduction or penalty for incorrect answers, so it is advantageous to guess if you do not have time to answer a question.

Begin your preparation with LSAC materials and then assess your progress. Most students benefit from a more structured program of study such as that available through a commercial test preparation course.

Commercial courses are expensive and the quality of instruction can be uneven, so it is important to learn who will be teaching the course and what materials will be used. Talk with others who have taken the LSAT to learn from their experience, especially concerning the effectiveness of courses you may be considering. Such courses can be helpful in motivating you to study and in building your confidence. Your pre law advisor can provide you with a list of popular commercial prep courses in the NYC area. Recognizing that commercial test prep courses can be costly, Baruch College, has established the Max Berger Pre-Law LSAT Reimbursement Program, reimbursing Baruch College students and recent alumni up to $2,000 in LSAT prep costs.

If you are registered for a test but feel you are not fully prepared or in a frame of mind to perform well, it may be better not to take the test; law schools will not view an absence on the test date negatively as long as you do not have multiple absences. Plan to be well-prepared and to take the test only once, but if you do not believe your score is representative of your abilities, for example, you were scoring considerably higher on practice tests, you may want to consider retaking the test.

Law schools are required to report the higher/highest of multiple scores of students in their entering class to the American Bar Association. Those scores are then reported to organizations such as the Law School Admission Council for use in their online and print information.

Schools vary, however, in how they consider multiple LSAT scores in making admissions decisions. Though many schools use the higher/highest score in reaching decisions, some of the more competitive schools use the average of multiple scores unless there is a compelling reason to use the higher/highest score.

Most schools welcome an addendum explaining the point difference in scores, including any extenuating circumstances and a history of performance on standardized tests. LSAC will report the results of all LSATs you have taken within five years; however, you may find some schools willing to consider only scores received within a three- or four-year period.

The Credential Assembly Service

To centralize and standardize objective application information—GPAs and LSAT scores—ABA-approved law schools require applicants to subscribe to the Credential Assembly Service (CAS). The service organizes and analyzes applicant information in a way that allows law schools to compare academic records from undergraduate schools that use different grading systems.

Register for the CAS through LSAC, and then send or take transcript request forms, available through the CAS, to each college or university from which you have earned academic credit. Baruch students and alumni may request transcripts through the Registrar's office.

Study Abroad

If you enrolled in a study abroad program sponsored by Baruch College, and the courses along with grades and credits using the Baruch grading system are recorded on your official transcript, you do not need to send an additional transcript reflecting the study abroad grades/credits. Those grades will be calculated into both the home institution's GPA and the overall GPA.

If you enrolled in a study abroad program sponsored by another U.S. or Canadian college or university, in addition to your Baruch College transcript, you must have the college or university sponsoring the study abroad program send a transcript directly to the CAS. List the U.S. or Canadian institution on your CAS registration under "other institutions attended." If the grades and credits appear on the sponsoring school's transcript, using the school's grading scale, then those grades will be calculated into both the sponsoring school's GPA and the overall GPA, but not into your home institution's GPA, as this is "transfer" work.

The report prepared by the CAS will include the following:

- A year-by-year grade and credit summary
- Photocopies of all your transcripts
- Your GPA for each academic year, your degree GPA* from Baruch College, and your cumulative GPA* reflecting work at Baruch College and all other undergraduate institutions you have attended
 - Important Note: F grade replacements will be recalculated back into your GPA by LSAC's CAS system, with the effect of decreasing the GPA reflected on the Baruch transcript
- A description of your overall grade distribution
- The mean LSAT score and GPA of students at Baruch who have subscribed to the CAS and your percentile graduation rank among those students
- LSAT scores from the past five years, including cancellations and absences
- An average LSAT score, if you have more than one score on file
- A copy of your LSAT writing sample

The CAS report may also include an applicant index described in the Admissions Criteria section.

The Application

You can apply to any ABA-approved law school through the CAS electronic application, which streamlines the process by allowing you to enter common information only once; you then complete each school's individual application and submit your applications electronically.

Completing application forms is a fairly straightforward process. Schools will be seeking basic information about you, including your academic background, extracurricular activities, and employment history. You may be asked to list other schools to which you are applying; responding to this question and/or indicating an interest in financial aid will not affect your chances for admission.

Be truthful and forthright as you complete the applications. Enclose a resume with your application, but be sure to respond to all of the questions on the applications. Baruch students and alumni are encouraged to follow the resume formats provided in our Resume Writing Guide.

Personal Statements

Personal statements are requested by most law schools. They provide the opportunity for you to go beyond the objective aspects of the application to discuss who you are and what is important to you.

Schools will be seeking information about your background, personal qualities and leadership skills, and motivation to learn what is unique about you and what distinguishes you from other candidates with similar GPAs and LSAT scores.

Your goal, then, will be to write a concise, detailed statement establishing yourself as an individual. An interesting and personal discussion about yourself, one that reveals your personality and character, will help you come alive to the admissions committee.

Personal statements are typically two typed, double-spaced pages, though you may find that some schools will give more latitude in terms of length. If schools don't provide guidelines on length, it's advisable to submit a statement that's approximately two pages in length. A few schools will limit the number of words permitted and you should abide by their guidelines. Very few schools provide prompt questions to be used in crafting your personal statement.

Proofread carefully, as any typographical or grammatical errors will detract from the favorable impression the statement might otherwise make. Do not use large words in an attempt to impress readers; instead, use simple language correctly, and rely on well-organized, interesting content to make an impression. Resources: As a matriculated student, Baruch's Writing Center will proof-read your statement and provide guidance on grammar and spelling. Baruch's pre-law advisor will provide the same assistance to all Baruch students and alumni.

Your statement should be serious, honest, and sincere, and the tone should be confident and positive; any negative information you feel compelled, or required, to discuss should be addressed in other parts of the application or in an addendum.

Law schools will be looking for evidence that you can write a coherent statement. Follow general guidelines for writing essays: there should be introductory and concluding paragraphs; each paragraph should begin with a topic sentence; and there should be a clear line of development through the statement. Ideas should be supported with concrete examples.

Diversity Statements

Some applicants may choose to submit an optional diversity statement. Law schools value diversity and seek to create a student body composed of individuals with unique perspectives from diverse backgrounds. Veterans, persons of color, first-generation college students, immigrants, those with a disability, parents, older applicants, individuals from economically disadvantaged backgrounds, and those who identify as LGBTQ may want to consider submitting a diversity statement.

Diversity statements are your opportunity to let law schools know what diversity you might bring to their campus, what obstacles you have overcome and how you are different from the traditional law school applicant.

These statements are typically no longer than one typed, double-spaced page. Some schools will provide guidelines on required or recommended length or word count for diversity statements.

As with your personal statement, carefully proofread your diversity statement.

Letters of Recommendation

Most law schools request that two or three letters of recommendation be submitted on behalf of applicants. If letters are not required, it is a good idea, nonetheless, to submit them. Admissions committees will be seeking information not provided elsewhere in the application. Recommendation letters should include concrete examples of intellectual strength, judgment, motivation, and leadership, along with an appraisal of communication skills and a comparison to peers.

Letters written by members of the academic community, especially professors in your major, carry the most weight, since they can address your performance in an academic setting and discuss your potential for success in law school. Law schools value letters that address a student's writing, class participation, research, analytical skills, and other academic abilities.

They are especially interested in a professor's assessment of a student, as compared to other students he or she has taught over the years.

At least one letter should be from a professor in your undergraduate major, if possible. As you consider whom to ask, remember that it is better to have an in-depth letter from a teaching assistant or lecturer with whom you worked closely than to have a cursory letter from a renowned professor who barely knows you.

Letters from people outside academia may carry less weight, since they may be unable to address the topic of greatest interest to admissions committees: your academic potential. However, if you have been in the work force a couple of years or more, letters from supervisors can be helpful.

You can submit additional letters even though a school asks for two. Three letters will be acceptable at most schools and four should be considered the absolute maximum.

Make an appointment to meet with your letter writers well in advance of the application deadline. Ask them, "Do you feel you know my work well enough to write a positive letter on behalf of my application to law school?" Provide information about your background to assist him/her in writing a detailed letter:

- A cover sheet describing your academic relationship, including courses you have taken, research you have conducted, your experience as a TA, etc.
- A copy of your transcript
- A draft of your personal statement (if available)
- A resume
- Copies of graded exams or papers written in his/her class
- Details about how the letters should be submitted to the CAS or to the law schools
- A list of dates when recommendations are due

Waive your right of access since you may find writers unwilling to write letters if applicants have access to them, and some admissions committee members may discount disclosed letters.

After you have received decisions, send thank you letters to your recommenders, and let them know where you have been accepted and where you intend to enroll.

LSAC offers a Letter of Recommendation Service (LOR). Recommenders send letters directly to LSAC, which then forwards the letters to law schools to which you are applying. You can specify that targeted letters be sent to specific schools; otherwise, general letters will be sent to every school to which you apply.

Some law schools accept online evaluations by recommenders instead of or in addition to the traditional letter of recommendation. The evaluation service is offered through LSAC. Carefully review each school's application instructions to determine whether an online evaluation is accepted or required. Generally, law schools prefer traditional letters of recommendation over evaluations as the letters of recommendations allow room for the recommender to provide more detailed information about you. Letters will be maintained for five years from the time you register for the CAS or from the time you take the LSAT, whichever comes last.

Dean's Certifications

A dean's certification (or letter/clearance) is required by some law schools to confirm that applicants have not been involved in academic or disciplinary transgressions as undergraduates.

The certification is generally a formality. At Baruch College it is handled by the Dean of Students' Office in consultation with those offices responsible for judicial administration on campus.

Filing Your Applications

Use this checklist to ensure you are completing all parts of the application:

- Prepare for the LSAT
- Register for the LSAT and the CAS
- Order LSAT prep materials, videos, and publications
- Change your LSAT date, if necessary
- Check test date availability and account information in real time
- Obtain your LSAT score by e-mail and view online your answer sheet, score conversion table and test book (for disclosed tests)
- Check the status of your file online, including your transcript, letters of recommendation and law school requests for your CAS report
- Research law schools and application deadlines
- Apply to law school electronically

Remember that your file is not complete until all parts, including your LSAT score, recommendation letters and the CAS report, have been received by law schools.

Here are some additional strategies for applying to law school:

- Start early
- Make realistic choices on schools
- Read information carefully provided by schools online or in hard copy
- Follow directions
- Print copies of your applications to use as drafts
- Use LSAC's electronic applications
- Provide complete and accurate responses
- Submit fees with your applications
- Respect deadlines; Apply Early!!!

Taking Time Off

Taking some time before entering law school is becoming more common and can be advantageous for several reasons:

- You will be able to devote more time and energy during your senior year to your academics rather than to preparation for the LSAT and time-consuming law school applications.
- When you apply to law school, your entire academic record will be available to law schools, not just six or seven semesters; if you are like most students, your highest grades will come later in your undergraduate education.
- The New York County DA's office hires paralegals for 1-2 years. Additionally, a lot of NY big law firms have two-year paralegal programs for college graduates interested in going to law school as a way to improve their pipeline; some will even offer reimbursement for LSAT courses (see, for example, Paul, Weiss; Proskauer; Skadden; Cravath; and Cleary and many more.
 - Finally, Yale has some gap year & short-term employment ideas on their site.

Considering Admissions Decisions

Applicants are informed by e-mail or letter of the schools' decisions; candidates are either accepted, denied, or wait-listed, which means the applicant is considered a desirable candidate and may be admitted later.

Law schools often place applicants on "hold" or "reserve" prior to reaching a decision and frequently notify candidates of this status. Applications of those on hold or reserve are reconsidered at a later date, usually before the files of those who have been wait-listed.

Enhancing Your Application

There are several things you can do to improve your chances of admission if you are on reserve or have been wait-listed:

- Write a letter to the director of admissions to inform him/her of your strong interest in the school and to provide an update on your activities since you submitted your application.
- If the school is your first choice, state that you will attend if accepted.
- If you are a senior, inform the school of accomplishments since you applied, for example, that you have completed your honors thesis or received an award or recognition.
- If you are currently working, describe your professional responsibilities and other worthwhile activities in which you are engaged; include an updated resume.
- Send an additional letter of recommendation from a professor or employer.
- Visit the law school to demonstrate your strong interest; contact the admissions office to arrange for a tour and to sit in on a class or two. Some admissions officers will agree to meet with applicants, but generally, these discussions are not evaluative.

Making a Decision

Visit the law schools when deciding among schools that have accepted you. Take tours and attend classes, make an effort to meet faculty and staff, and speak with students to get their perspective on factors important to you, such as accessibility of faculty, competitiveness of students, career services, assistance of library personnel, etc.

Follow up with a thank you letter to the admissions office stating what impressed you about the school.

Talking with students/alumni at schools of interest about their experience can be helpful in reaching your decision. Contact the schools to inquire about speaking with current students and whether they have an alumni network you can access.

Cost and financial aid awards also need to be considered when making a decision. If you will be entering law school with debt accumulated as an undergraduate, financial factors can play an even greater role in your decision.

If you are deciding between a school that is highly regarded and one that interests you but is less prestigious, keep in mind that more highly ranked schools will, in general, provide better opportunities after graduation. Remember, however, that the less prestigious school may provide you with the opportunity to graduate with very little or no law school debt and an opportunity to perform at the top of the class thereby drawing the attention of many legal employers.

Schools that accept you will ask for a deposit to hold a space for you. Deposits may be due before you hear from all schools. Contact schools that accept you to explain your situation and ask if they would be willing to extend the deposit deadline. Also, consult with your pre-law advisor who can help you weigh your options.

On or about May 15 of each year, law schools may be provided information concerning applicants' commitments to enroll. Applicants should be aware of possible policies on multiple deposits set by schools to which they applied.

Once you have reached a final decision on which school you will attend, notify the other schools that accepted you so that they can offer your place to someone else.

Reapplying Later

If you are not accepted at a law school you would like to attend, consider retaking the LSAT if you feel that you can improve your score, or revising your list of schools if you decide to reapply. Working for a few years can make a difference in the admissions process and can also provide exposure to another career field that might engage your interest. If you decide to reapply to a school that denied your application originally, it is advised to refresh, update or change application materials such as letters of recommendation and/or your personal statement, as well as your resume.

You are encouraged to refer to the Law School Admission Council's Statement of Good Admissions and Financial Aid Practices, which will help you understand the practices governing the admissions and financial aid process.

Financing Law School

Law school is an important investment in your future. Consider the financial aid process as seriously as you do the law school application process.

Before you apply to law school, spend money wisely and pay your bills on time to ensure a good credit record. Bad credit will affect your ability to borrow money. If possible, pay off credit cards and other consumer debt before law school. You should consider checking your credit annually, which is usually free of charge through companies like equifax or experian.

Think about your post-law school goals. Salaries for lawyers vary widely, depending on the type of practice and region. Law school debt will claim a significant portion of your income as a lawyer.

To keep debt to a minimum, consider state-supported law schools, or schools that offer merit and/or financial based aid. If you are considering a career in government or public interest law, investigate loan repayment assistance programs (LRAPs) that help law school graduates repay their education debt.

Sources of Funds

Personal Savings/Family Support

If possible, set aside your own funds to help pay for law school. Talk with family members about whether they can help with law school expenses. Some students choose to live at home during law school to avoid paying rent.

Federal Loans

Many students rely primarily on federal loan programs to finance law school. Because you are applying for graduate study, you are considered independent of your parents for these loans.

Some law schools participate in the Ford Direct Loan Program, through which the U.S. Department of Education is the lender. At other law schools, you will choose a lender to obtain the federal Stafford or Grad PLUS loans.

The following federal loans are available to law students:

- (Unsubsidized) Federal Stafford and Direct (Ford) Loan. A student may borrow up to a combined total of $20,500 in subsidized and unsubsidized loans.
- Graduate PLUS Loans for Law Students. Law students with an absence of bad credit may be eligible for these loans. Many law students are choosing Graduate PLUS loans instead of private loans to cover their remaining financial need beyond the $20,500 available through Stafford loans.
- Federal Perkins Loans. These low interest loans are available at some law schools. Each student's award is determined by the school, based on information obtained from the FAFSA (see How to Apply for Financial Aid). In this program, your individual law school would be your lender.

Private Loans

Credit is an important factor in securing private loans. Interest rates, fees, and terms of repayment vary significantly.

It is best to work with your law school financial aid office BEFORE making a decision about loans for law school.

Beware of direct marketing from private lenders. It is possible to finance your legal education entirely through Federal Stafford and Direct Loans along with Graduate PLUS Loans, which are regulated by the federal government and typically have lower interest rates.

Grants and Scholarships

Grants and scholarships are offered by law schools based upon criteria set by the school, which can include academic merit, financial need, ethnicity, specific talents, residency or other qualifications. Check with each law school early in the application process for more information.

Law schools may offer merit scholarships to highly qualified applicants with an offer of admission. When law schools consider your financial need, they may require family income information even if you are considered independent for tax purposes, or for federal education loans.

Some states provide limited grants for law school; there are no federal grants for law students. Certain national foundations and organizations offer grants and scholarships for law school through a competitive application process.

Earnings

The American Bar Association sets limits on the number of hours a first-year, full-time law student can work per week. After the first year, many law students obtain summer employment and part-time employment during the school year. This can help reduce the amount of money borrowed.

Frugality

It is often said, “If you live like a lawyer in law school, you will live like a law student once you graduate.” Frugality can be your best friend.

How to Apply for Financial Aid

Check your credit. If you will be using Federal Grad PLUS or private loans for law school, order a free copy of your credit report and verify the information. These loans may not be available if your credit history does not meet minimum standards.

Apply early for financial aid. Check each law school’s website to learn financial aid deadlines. Some schools have priority dates for submitting financial aid information; students who apply earlier have a better opportunity to obtain limited grant money.

Complete your FAFSA as soon as possible after January 1. Completion of the FAFSA (Free Application for Federal Student Aid) is required for all federal student loan programs. The FAFSA is also used by some law schools to collect information for their own institutional aid. Because the FAFSA requires tax information from the previous year, it cannot be completed before January 1.

Some schools have separate applications for financial aid, while others use the law school application or the FAFSA. Schools also vary in how they distribute their own funds.

If you have special circumstances, provide this information to the law school financial aid office. This can be critical for law students who have been working full-time in the prior year or who have unusual medical or family expenses.

Do NOT wait to complete the FAFSA until after you are admitted to a law school. You can list up to ten law schools where you want reports sent, and update this list with additional schools.

If your federal tax return will not be ready until later in the spring, you can estimate prior year income on the FAFSA. Parental income is not considered in determining eligibility for federal loans to graduate-level students.

Making the Decision

Once you have provided all required information, law schools can offer you a financial aid package. To determine your financial need, schools take the estimated contribution calculated by the federal government on your FAFSA and subtract it from the school's student expense budget.

In deciding which law school to attend, it is important to balance your financial considerations with other criteria, such as reputation, location, size, faculty, programs and placement success. Compare the net of your projected costs at each school you are considering, offset by any offers of grants or scholarships from the school, to determine the amount you will need to make up through loans or personal funds.

Applying for Loans

Once you have chosen a law school, expect to receive important additional financial information from the school. Even though you have already completed the FAFSA and law school financial aid forms, you must still apply for the loans.

Your law school financial aid office will help you identify the correct process for securing federal loans, and, private loans if needed. Do your homework to compare fees and repayment terms for all of your loans, using loan calculators available on financial aid websites (see below). Keep good records of all loan transactions.

Borrow only what you need, and not more, to keep your debt low and your monthly repayment amount manageable.

Law School Application Checklist

Freshman and Sophomore Years

- ❑ Select a major in a field that both interests you and allows you to excel academically.
- ❑ Begin to form relationships with professors, lecturers, and TAs so that they will know your work well enough to serve as recommenders in the future.
- ❑ Expand your education by seeking summer jobs or internships in fields of interest.
- ❑ Concentrate on maintaining a strong GPA.
- ❑ Meet with your pre-law advisor to assess your academic, extracurricular, and work experiences and to discuss the law school application process. Make your advisement appointment through Starr Search or by calling (646) 312-4693. Set aside 60 minutes for the session.
- ❑ Begin drafting your personal statement.
- ❑ Attend Baruch's weekly Pre-Law Society campus events, participate in the Max Berger Pre-Law Activities and Programs, including the Fellowship Program and Summer & Winter Institutes.
- ❑ Take a practice LSAT.

Junior Year

- ❑ Work very closely with your pre-law advisor throughout your junior year.
- ❑ Sign up for an account with the Law School Admission Council by going to their website at www.lsac.org/.
- ❑ Begin preparing for the LSAT; if you are ready, register for the September/October administration in the summer following your Junior year. Remember to apply for the Max Berger Pre-Law LSAT Reimbursement Program, if you qualify.
- ❑ Secure a summer job or internship, if possible, in a law-related field. Apply for the Max Berger Unpaid Pre-Law Stipend program if your legal internship is unpaid.
- ❑ Research law schools and compile a list of tentative schools.
- ❑ Register for the Credential Assembly Service (CAS).
- ❑ Ask potential recommendation writers if they would be willing to write letters on your behalf. Provide them with the CAS recommendation forms or the schools' forms along with sufficient information to write detailed letters.
- ❑ Complete your personal statement and have it reviewed by Baruch's Writing Center and your pre-law advisor.

Senior Year (or Year Before Entering Law School)

- ❑ Use the Law School Admission Council's electronic applications to apply to the law schools you have chosen.
- ❑ Have transcripts from all undergraduate institutions you have attended sent to the CAS after verifying their accuracy.
- ❑ Make sure your CAS report is correct.
- ❑ Make arrangements to have dean's certifications sent to schools that require them.
- ❑ Attend law school fairs and programs offered by LSAC; Baruch College and other organizations.
- ❑ Take the LSAT in the early fall (September / October)
- ❑ Complete applications by early to mid-November.
- ❑ Meet with a pre-law advisor to answer any of your outstanding questions.
- ❑ Take the LSAT in November/December if you did not take it previously or are retaking the test.
- ❑ Check with schools to make sure your files are complete.

- ❑ Complete the FAFSA and other need analysis forms such as Need Access as well as any institutional financial aid applications as soon after January 1 as possible.
- ❑ Meet with your pre-law advisor in the early winter if you need to assess your options as schools respond to you.
- ❑ Take appropriate action on acceptances, wait-list statuses, and financial aid packages.
- ❑ Have a final transcript sent to the law school you plan to attend and/or to any schools still considering your application.

Legal Career Resources

The following is a partial listing (Resources for Pre Law Candidates, Bibliography) of resources to help prospective law students explore legal careers, consider legal education, apply to law school, and finance their law school education.

Law-Related Organizations
